Baby Coho Found Upstream of Aupe Culvert!

Some happy news of ecological success in Willow Creek at Aupe Crescent culvert! When the Rewilding Water and Earth (RWE) team visited on Friday February 27, they observed a school of Coho parr (baby fish) in the wetland pool just upstream of the new Aupe culvert. Check out the video, and a couple screenshots below!

RWE also observed a mallard duck wading in the same pool. This is great news that habitat for fish has been improved and expanded in Willow Creek, and it's a good indicator of the potential habitat value of further stream restoration. Have you seen the coho parr or any other wildlife returning to the creek? Let us know!
